Stiegler is interested in technics as time, not just “in” time. He returns to Leroi-Gourhan to look at evolution of the human being which is always already technical. Stiegler explores the paradox of technics being human power as well as the power for humanity to destroy itself. Part 1 – The Invention of the Human

The Technics and Time series is the fullest systematic statement by Stiegler of his philosophy, and the first volume draws largely on the work of Martin Heidegger, André Leroi-Gourhan, Gilbert Simondon, Bertrand Gille, Jean-Jacques Rousseau, and Jean-Pierre Vernant, in order to outline and develop Stiegler's major philosophical theses. The series currently consists of three books, but of these only the first two volumes have thus far been translated into English.
